

RE-ENGINEERED BY PHYSICIANS, FOR PHYSICIANS

A few notable highlights from the 2016 Colorado Medical Society Annual Meeting

First and foremost, this meeting was designed by physicians and for physicians. The Re-engineering the Annual Meeting Work Group met throughout the spring to brainstorm topics and events that would benefit physicians in all stages of their careers. (L-R): Michael Volz, MD; David Markenson, MD; Gina Martin, MD; Rachelle Klammer, MD, Charlie Lippolis, DO; Michael Lepore, MD; Brandi Ring, MD; Christine LaRocca, MD (chair); and Leto Quarles, MD.

“My kids had a blast!”

Kids' activities kept the young ones busy throughout the event.

Outgoing president Michael Volz, MD, and Past President Tamaan Osbourne-Roberts, MD, recognized the “50-year physicians,” those who graduated medical school 50 years ago; (L-R): Michael Volz, MD; W. Ben Galloway, MD; Marco Celada, MD; Melyn Klein, MD; Howard Kerstein, MD; M. Robert Yakely, MD; and Tamaan Osbourne-Roberts, MD.

“I really enjoyed the small group sessions.”

Expert faculty from around the state and country presented interactive plenary sessions and workshops. Cyrus Mirshab, MD, of CPMG, led a workshop on the importance of physician wellness and how to implement strategies for happier doctors.

“The keynote speaker and her breakout session were great!”

Keynote speaker Mary Loverde wove humorous stories illustrating a focus on family, friends and rituals with evidence-based tactics to maintain health.

“The gala was really fun this year!”

Those attending had a chance to unwind by participating in light-hearted festivities during the conference.
